

A tunnel is properly used to access an existing lode claim or claims, or for exploration of unknown lode-type locatable mineral deposits. Unknown deposits are sometimes referred to as blind lodes. Tunnel site locators can claim previously unknown lodes found over the course of the three thousand-foot tunnel. However, if the tunnel locator ceases work for more than six consecutive months, the rights to claim unknown lode deposits the tunnel may have intersected are lost.